

Pullback: Buying support/Shorting resistance

1 Setup

- Presence of a good impulse setting up further continuation.
- Market is not overextended.
- Market is not on the third (or later) trend leg.
- Absence of momentum divergence.
- Absence of buying or selling climax.
- Pullbacks show generally lower activity (bar range) and volume than the trend legs.
- Absence of strong countertrend momentum

2 Trigger

Buy against support level near bottom or selling short against resistance on top of pullback

2.1 Support/resistance usually slopes in pullbacks

- Does not make sense to exit a trade that is within the loping level

2.2 Trigger 1: Lower time frame climax

1. Draw a parallel trend line pullback
  - (a) First draw a standard linear trendline for lower timeframe between higher lows in an uptrend (demand line) or lower highs for downtrend (supply line)

- (b) Create a parallel line to the opposite side of the trend (attach to pivot highs in uptrend) BETWEEN the initial two anchor points for standard trend line. Also must not cut through prices between the two initial anchor points
- 2. Price drops past support, but immediately recover within a few bars (lower time-frame climax), but should be clear from default timeframe

Note this is not a buy-and-forget entry. Needs experience and to pay attention because most likely exhaustion below support happens in a single bar.

2.3 Trigger 2: Bottom of support

- 1. See a bounce back in pullback. Draw horizontal line at peak.
- 2. Buy when when price reaches support again.
- 3. Must not be buying into 3rd or more test of support (ie, only buying after one bounce). If support is tested for third or more times, reduce exposure.

3 Stop

- Crucial to have a stop loss.
- Recommend to set one further away from pattern and add in a few cents beyond obvious levels
- Can change stops dramatically a few bars into a trade
- Can use a time stop

4 Profit Target

- Most conservative profit target is previous pivot high of the setup leg
- Good exit plan allows taking partial profits and holding onto portion of position for further trend legs
- Can use MMO profit targets, but recommend to take majority or all profits even though trade has not quite reached the target
